

NYC's Best New Restaurants of 2016

Eater's critic offers a list of the restaurants that were a cut above the rest

A tasting of papads at Indian Accent by Daniel Krieger

Unlike New York's slowly evolving Mexican scene, the city has no shortage of expensive South Asian establishments. Indian Accent, a New Delhi import that opened in Midtown's Le Parker Meridien this year, is the most expensive of them all, selling four course menus for $90 and tastings for $125. Chef Manish Mehrotra justifies these prices through a quiet, stately room, and through his excellent cooking. The meal reaches a pinnacle with soy kheema, a cumin-infused treat that could go toe to toe with most meat-based chilis and come out on top. 123 West 56th St. indianaccent.com.